The President's Message

BOB BOTHWELL
President of the
Students' Union

For many of us, the end of this year will be another step forward and a fond farewell to Strathcona Composite. To these members of the 1965 Grad Class I offer my best wishes for the future. They are the students primarily responsible for the success we have enjoyed this year. I hope the rest of you will attempt to live up to their high standards.

At this time I wish to thank the Tricolor, the Activities Board, the Room Representatives, the Grad Class Executive, and particularly the Students' Union Executive for their support throughout the year. The Students Union extends a special note of appreciation to Mr. Stratte, Mr. Hougland, and Mr. Innes for all the advice they have supplied.

My congratulations are extended to the Physical Education department on the fine job they did in building our school teams and promoting school spirit. Congratulations are also in order for Scona's unfailingly faithful group of cheerleaders, who supported our teams in every game from September until June.

In closing, I thank each and every one of you for making this a year I could never forget and I wish you all good luck in the years to come.

BOB BOTHWELL,
President.

For many of us, this year marks the end of one challenge and the beginning of another. These have been wonderful years, years of learning to live in the world which we must soon take a part in shaping. We have begun to learn how to live with people: with friends, with co-workers, and with seniors.

This year, those who leave will have a very special companion. He has helped many before us in learning to live and has watched them pass through Scona's doors, their eyes turned to the future. For sixteen years, he has been a guiding force for the students and teachers of Strathcona. Now, as our graduates leave, he will join them; and with him will go an intrinsic part of Strathcona — a loss which those left behind will never cease to feel. To Mr. Innes, our retiring principal, we express our sincere thanks and our best wishes for the future.

History of Class '65

BRAD WILLIS
Class Historian

The history of the Class of '65 is that of the common experience of several hundred people of varying backgrounds, abilities, and interests. Our athletic, scholastic, and artistic achievements have been considerable, we have excelled in a wide variety of activities, from basketball to basketweaving. A catalogue of our successes, like a list of famous battles, would be a long and impressive one. But a history of the Class must be, by definition, more than a catalogue; it must try to isolate significant experiences and attitudes resulting from them.

This is a very difficult task, because we are anything but a homogeneous group. Most of the interests, character traits, and inherited prejudices with which we entered high school remain unaltered; and few of the things which we all experienced affected all—or even most of us—in the same way. In fifteen or twenty years, when we are old and decrepit, when we have forgotten the scores of the games and the names of most of the teachers, how will we evaluate our three years in high school?

Whether we will look back on high school nostalgically or apathetically depends on two interrelated things; what we got out of it and what we put into it. Although the former is to a considerable extent a function of the latter, there are certain things that high school offers all of us. Perhaps the most important of these was the large number of opportunities it gave us to learn about things that interested us. I refer not only to the formal academic program, but also to the multiplicity of extra-curricular activities sponsored, encouraged, or tolerated by the school. The school sponsored our athletic teams, dramatic productions, enrichment courses, and clubs. Although at times the administration seemed unduly restrictive, it encouraged dances and similar activities; and it was so fond of our idiosyncrasies that it kept a permanent record of them on our conduct cards.

Tonight we are symbolically being ejected into adult life, and despite the contention of the Province of Alberta that people with high school diplomas are prepared to fend for themselves, most of us contemplate the prospect with disbelief. Undoubtedly, we are more sophisticated than we were three years ago, but what has high school done to us that has prepared us for whatever it is that we are going to encounter?

It has exposed us to a more rigorous academic discipline than we had previously encountered. It has demanded of us more time, more concentration, more concerted mental effort. It has sought to develop in us greater maturity, and it has made a reasonable amount of progress in that direction.

Our history is as yet unfinished, and we will have to wait until we receive the results of our departmental examinations before we can permit ourselves to be smug about it. But for most us—although leaving high school, like entering it, is mildly traumatic—the past three years have been fun.

Valedictory

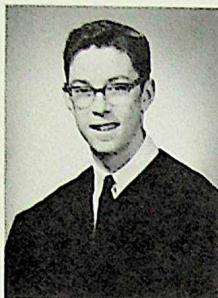

Tonight marks the symbolic conclusion of high school for each member of the class of 1965. Each of us has about eighteen years of education to look back on, and each of us has many more years of education to look forward to.

The day we were born, we started the long process of development that will continue throughout our lives. Gradually we began to develop the capacity for making our own decisions and assuming our own responsibilities. Our years of high school saw these responsibilities increase to unexpected and perhaps alarming proportions. Strathcona, although helping our development during but a short span of our lives, has provided the opportunity for us to grow into steady, capable young men and women. We thank Strathcona's teachers, her extracurricular activities, and her chaotic halls for helping us develop.

By this summer, we will have become members of the world of competition and the world of work. If we are to succeed, we must be individuals, and avoid blind acceptance of the status quo. It is now our job to keep thinking and to keep learning. We must continue developing as the world develops around us.

Albert Einstein defined "common sense" as "a system of prejudices built up before the age of eighteen." Let us avoid this kind of "common sense", but let us constantly employ "good sense."

Our Foster Child

This is the third year that the Students of Strathcona have supported Julia Daniels under the Foster Parents' Plan. Born in Venezuela on June 11, 1952, Julia later moved with her family to a suburb of Manila. In 1961, her father died leaving his family destitute and two months later her mother disappeared. When PLAN found the family, a maternal aunt had been trying to raise Julia and her four brothers and sisters on the $2.00 a week she earned selling vegetables.

Through the Foster Parent's Plan Julia has received food, clothing, medical care, and assurance of schooling. PLAN has improved conditions for the whole family by rebuilding their home after its destruction by Typhoon "Dading" in June 1964, and by helping the aunt begin a small business selling rice cakes.

Of the five children only Julia attends school. She is an average student in the sixth grade of a government elementary school. Being fond of sewing, Julia plans to become a seamstress.

In her letters Julia expresses her sincere gratitude for our desperately needed assistance. We hope that we will be able to continue this most worthwhile project of support to a foster child.

Chorus

The increasing number of high school instrumentalists and the persistent work of Mrs. Brine have helped make this a successful year for Scona's Music department.

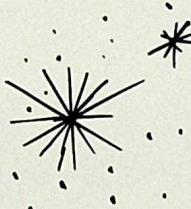

The Band was present at many football and basketball games and contributed to the school spirit. Fall and Spring concerts were presented to give music students an opportunity for playing in public and the senior orchestra was chosen for the High School Night of Music. The senior orchestra and beginners class also competed in the Kiwanis Music Festival. This year, complete uniforms for the senior orchestra and band were financed by the Student's Union.

Because of lack of interest the school chorus was forced to disband.

Nevertheless, Scona's music department is increasing its role and taking an active part in normal school life.

FROSH WELCOME WEEK

A time the Freshmen won't forget—Frosh Welcome Week—was held this year to acquaint the grade tens with their new school. Club Day gave the Freshmen a preview of the various activities they may partake in throughout the year. Kangaroo court once again showed the more "impartial" than ever judge and jury trying the never innocent Frosh and sentencing them severely. The fun-filled week came to its conclusion with the Frosh Dance. The Pharaohs provided the music for Scona's first dance of the new school year.

LI'L ABNER ROMP

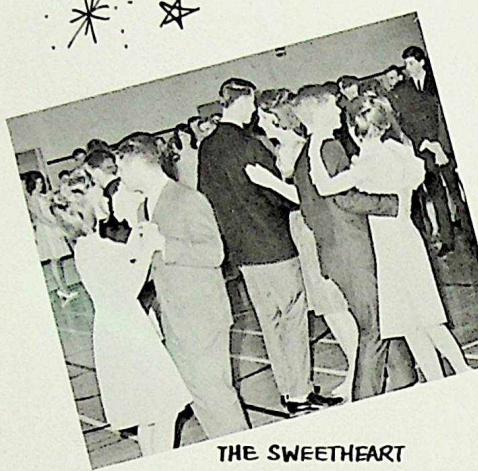

Quite a switch! This time the boys had a night out on the girls! Fellows, bedecked with "gorgeous" corsages, were dragged amongst the Dogpatch-style decorations to Scona's Annual Sadie Hawkins Dance. Following the ceremonial parade at intermission, prizes were awarded for the most original costume and corsage. The music for this swingin' dance was provided by the ever popular Pharaohs.

Sweethearts' Swirl

The night was a heavenly one, as beautifully gowned girls and their handsome escorts drifted dreamily across the dance floor to the strains of Len Whitley and his orchestra. The most memorable event of the evening was the crowning of Patti Williams as Miss Sweetheart of the Swirl. She was presented with a bouquet of roses by Bob Bothwell, the Students' Union president, while her attendants received lockets from last year's Sweetheart, Miss Krista Kalbach.

House League

This year the Girls' Athletic Council did a fine job of keeping the girls fit and in good running condition. Miss Silk was adviser. Linda Hill, president, and the house captains were Brenda Webber, Lorraine Goodwin, Marianne Macklam, and Carol Polinski.

Blue House proved themselves to have the strongest lungs in the initial houseleague event, the song yelling contest.

In volleyball, Green House made a clean sweep by winning both Junior and Senior divisions. Due to lack of participation, Basketball was cancelled.

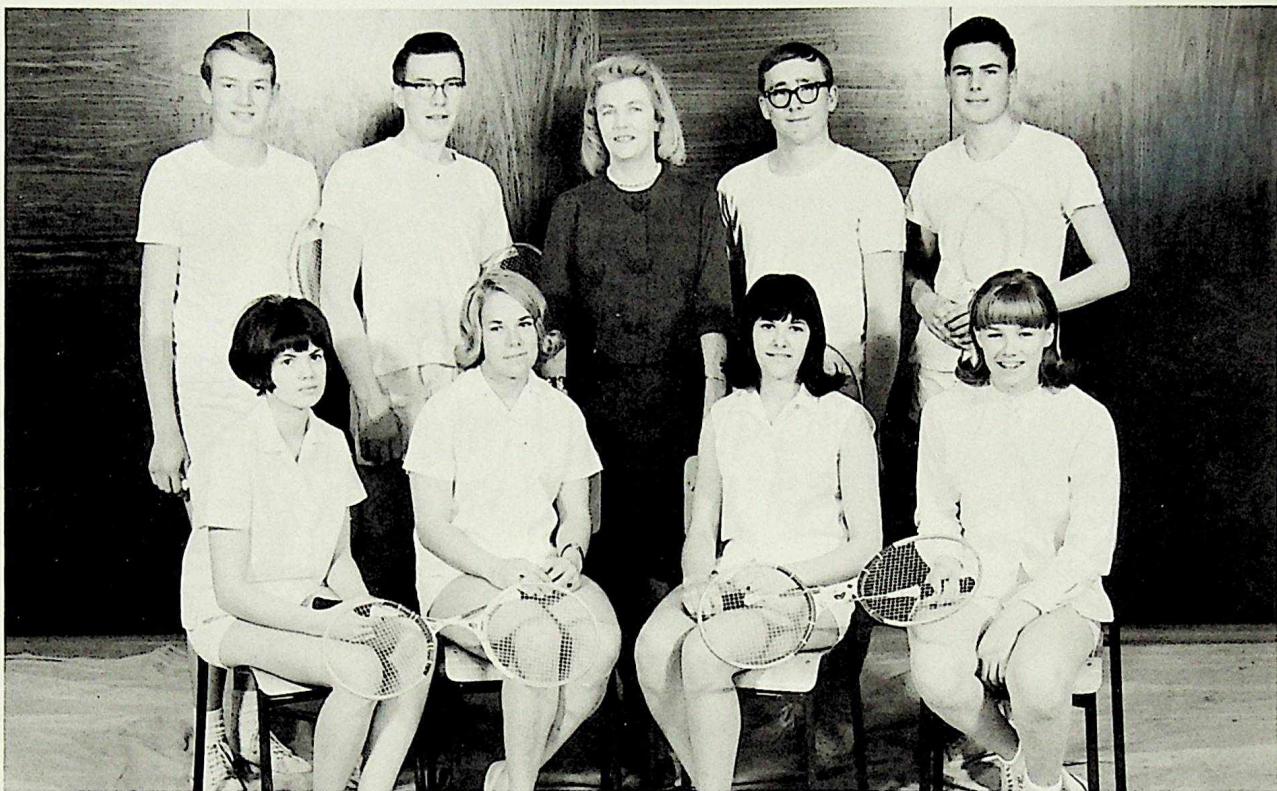

The run to Calgary was quite successful, with Green House winning for the second consecutive time. A new team was added to the run, the Polka Dots, a teachers' team. Green House scored another strike by winning the Bowling tournament and gaining more points for their house.

A Track and Field Meet and a Badminton Tournament will conclude the events for the year.

The House Projects were interesting and varied. Blue House held a Penny Carnival, with the added attraction of throwing sponges at Geoff Sturgeon. A skit and fudge sale was Green House's project. Mr. Agrell-Smith won the Gold House pie-eating contest. Red House plans to have a Mad-Hatter Day, complete with dance and a kooky hat show.

The boys were also very active in Houseleague. Green House came out on top of the Volleyball Section, although Blue won the Grade Ten division and Gold the Grade Eleven. Red House gained enough points to win first in total Basketball standings by winning both the Grade Ten and Eleven divisions. Green House won the Grade Twelve division. Track and Field and Soccer are not completed yet, but as it now stands, Green House is on top.

Senior Boys' Football

Scona's Senior Lords kicked off the '64 season in fine style again this year, but as the season progressed their strategy seemed to topple; almost a repeat performance of last year's struggle.

The Lords managed two wins, five losses and one tie out of eight regular season starts. A not too impressive record, but as an ancient sage (I can't remember which one) once said, "It isn't whether you win or lose but how you played the game that counts".

Mr. Gilfillan, Mr. Anderson and Mr. Breitkreutz deserve a vote of thanks for a job well done in the coaching department.

Terry Lampert did an excellent job as the squad's captain and Bill Buxton kept them on the ball with his unrivaled punting and place-kicking.

It was a great season for our Lords and we're all looking to an even better one next year.

Junior Boys' Football

Row 1: Norm Dorey, Revan MacQueen, Devar Chisholm, Harry Kemp, Bill McKay, Bill Ward, Pete Wilkin, Don Goyan, Gunther Bachman.

Row 3: Bill Patrick, Terry Rae, Joe Foster, Bruce McMillan, Doug Gaunt, Gerry Moysa, Rob Mitchell, Dave Baldwin, Don Souch, Steve Hruday.

Missing: Mr. Mercer, Mr. Chesney, Mr. Garner, Jim Shields.

The old hard-luck squad went at it again and as always inexperience plagued their success. The coaching staff consisted of imported veterans of the game. They were Keith Mercer, Wayne Chesney and Lorne Garner who took time off their university studies to help our boys out.

Out of six starts the Lords managed one win and one tie. Honorable mentions go to players Dave Baldwin and Gunther Bachman who scored a touchdown and two singles respectively in the game the club managed to win.

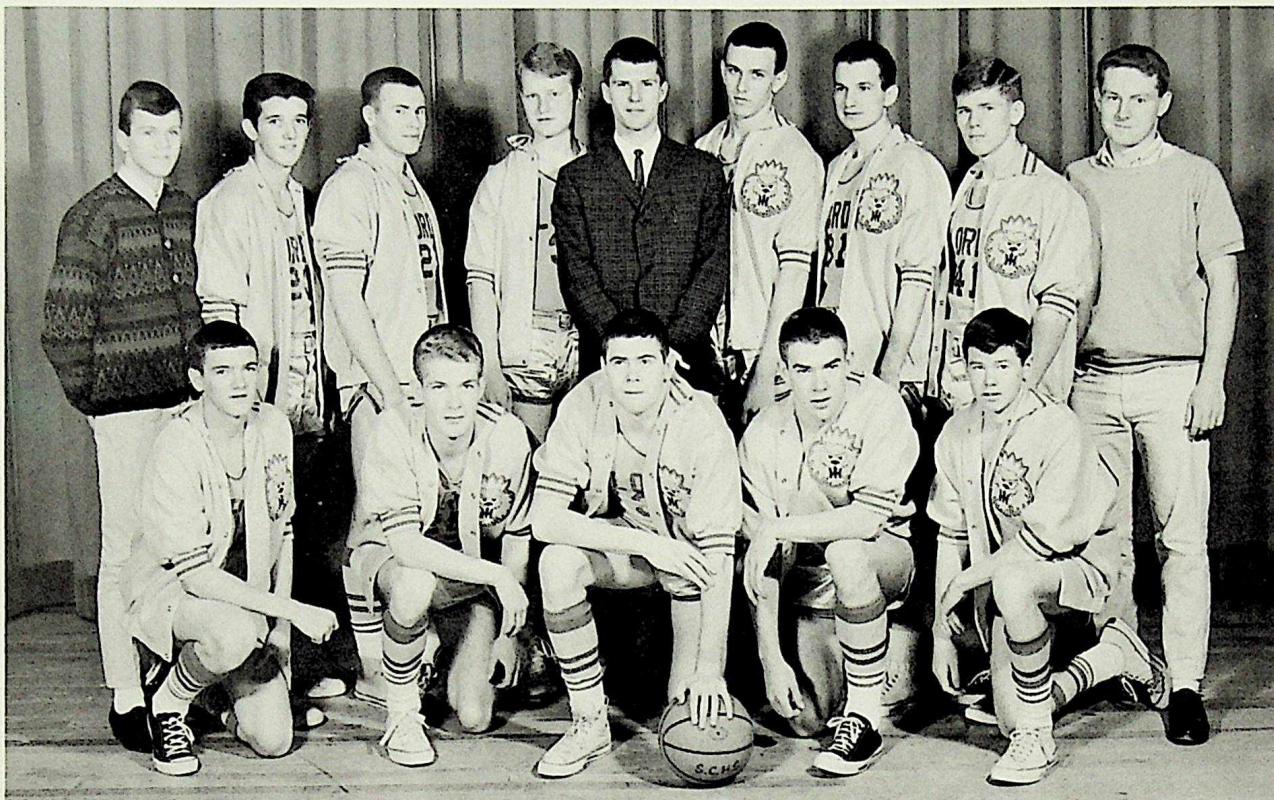

Senior Boys' Football

Row 2: Hugh Murray (Manager), Marty Klipper, Ron McLachlin, Robin Elofson, Mr. Anderson, Rick Molstad, Ellis Oberle, Harry Diemer, Stew MacAllister (Manager).

Senior Boys' Basketball

Although the Senior Lords didn't quite match the success of last years' club, they did come up with some exciting games.

Out of approximately fourteen starts they managed to hold down third spot in the city finals. Bill Buxton was top scorer with his thrilling two-pointers.

One exhibition game was played against the Iowa Ghosts again this year. In the Capher tournament Scona showed up well but lost out to the Bonnie Doon Lancers in the semi-finals.

The Lords' hard luck was due for the most part to the lack of key players that they were so blessed with last year, and to the inexperience of its new players.

Thanks go to Mr. Anderson for the fine coaching job and also to our lovely time-keeper, Laurie Anderson, for keeping our boys on their toes.

Junior Boys' Basketball

The Junior Basketball team came through with the best win-loss record in three years. Out of seventeen games the Junior Lords managed to run away victorious nine times while they just walked away the other eight.

High scorers for the team were Bill Patrick, Bill Ward and Don Cross. In one exhibition game our Lords won over the Ardrossan Seniors rather handily which is quite a record in itself.

The team wishes to thank Mr. Yasui and Mr. Wright for a coaching job well done.

Swim Team

Scona's swim team did a terrific job in the Annual swim meet this year. The boys' aggregate, the girls' aggregate, and the combined aggregate were won by Scona which in layman's terms means that they also won the city championship. Many thanks to Mr. Wilson, Marg Ewing and Eric Thomson for their fine coaching jobs.

Row 2: Miss Holmgren, Dianne Starr, Joy Bond (Captain), Carol Clute, Marj Allan, Norma Rault.

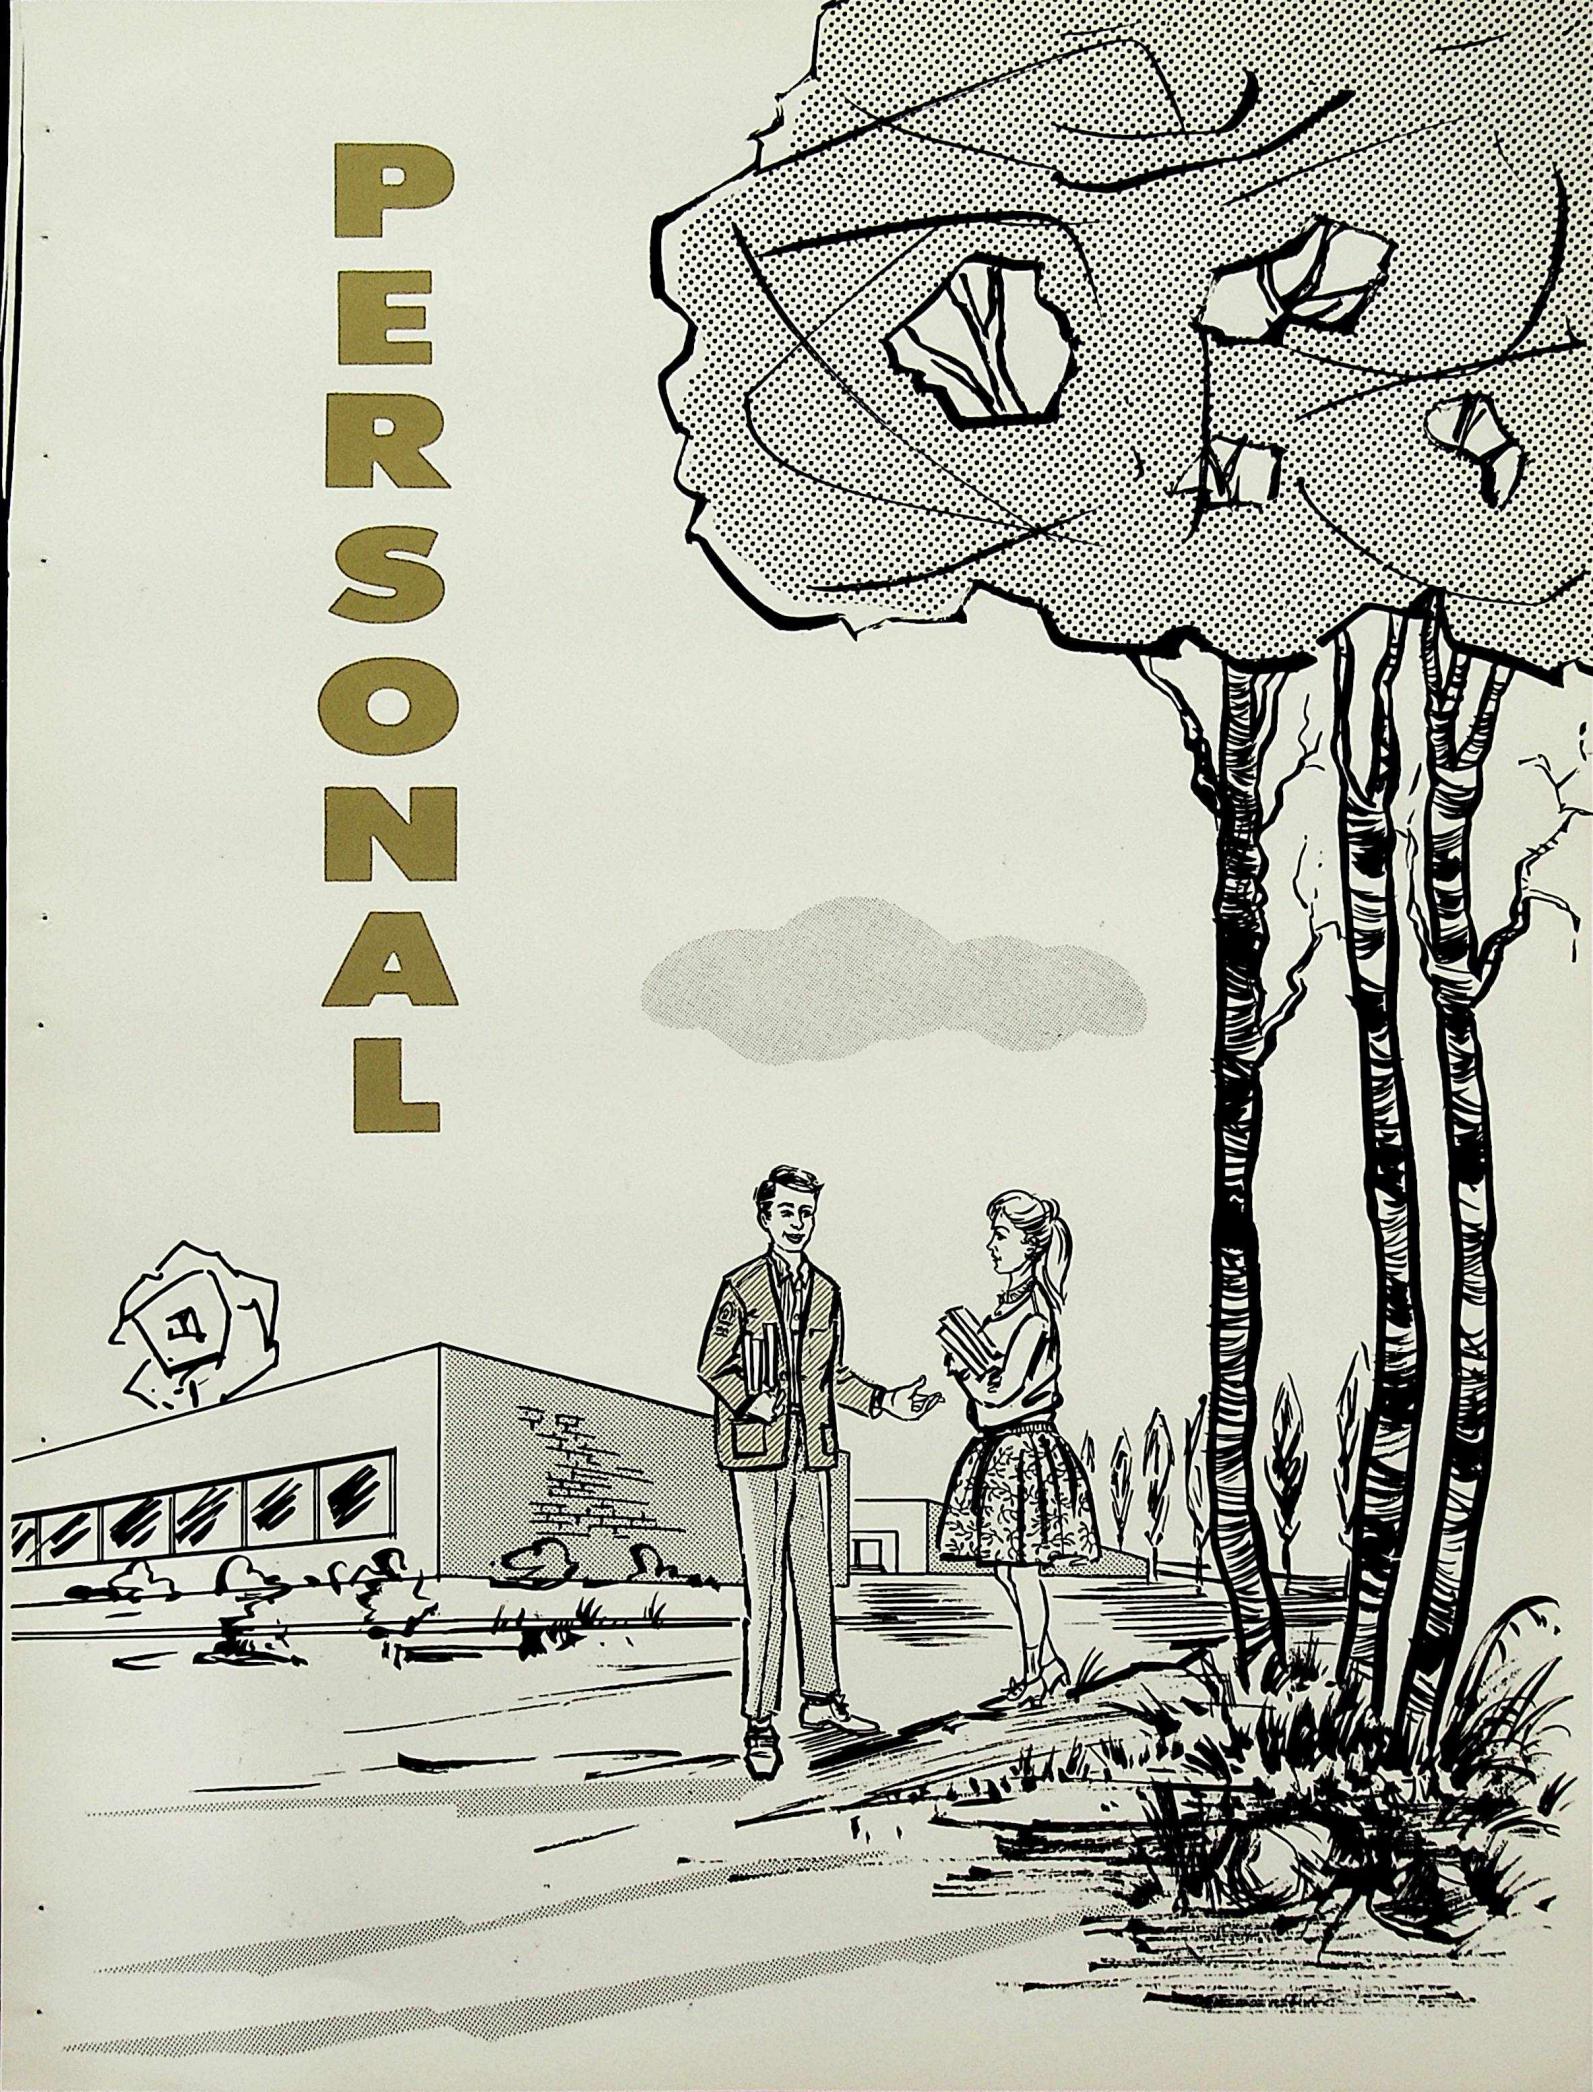

SENIOR GIRLS' VOLLEYBALL

With spirits high, the Senior Girls made a fine start for the Volleyball season. Although the girls played well and with good potential, they didn't reach the top. Captain Joy Bond did an excellent job and Miss Holmgren coached the team well. All in all, it was a fairly good season.

SENIOR GIRLS' BASKETBALL

Team spirit combined with fight created a good season of basketball for the Senior Girls. With Miss Silk as coach and Trinie Pluim as captain, the girls made a fine effort but were unable to win enough games to reach the top.

AWARDS

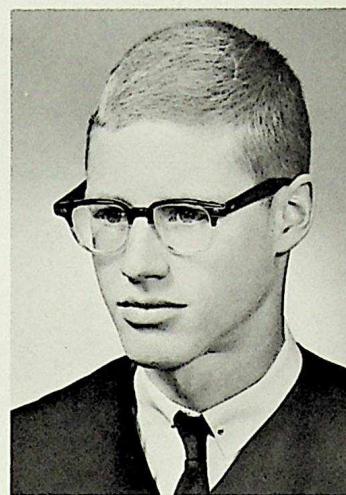

MAJOR

THE HARLEY-MILLAR-SUTTON TROPHY

This trophy, which is presented annually to the male student of the graduating class who is outstanding as an athlete, as a good student, and as a man, was donated by Brigadier Bruce S. MacDonald in memory of Pilot Officer John William Harley, Flying Officer John Whitla Millar, and Flight Lieutenant Harold Ransom Sutton. These three young men, who attended Strathcona High School, were killed in the Second Great War.

Eric Thomson, this year's winner, is an honors student in the current school year. An all-around athlete, his major contribution in this field has been as coach of the swimming team, which is considered a full-time assignment. Eric has carried out his coaching duties with distinction. He has also been a member of Scona's swim team and an instructor in the Swimming Club.

THE WEES TROPHY

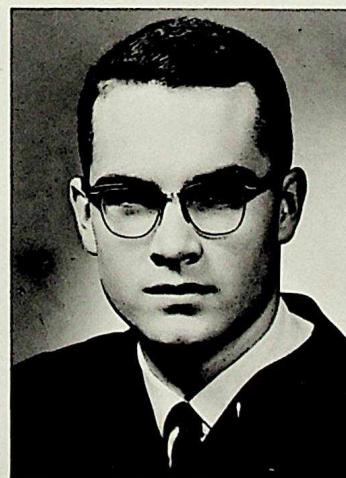

The original Wees Cup, donated in 1929 by Dr. W. R. Wees of Toronto, was replaced seven years ago by a new Wees Trophy. It is presented annually to the Grade Twelve student who attains the highest average on the Christmas and Easter examinations.

This year, for the first time, the Wees Trophy was awarded to two students, whose yearly averages were identical—92.25%. The winners are William Harris and Kenneth (Kim) McCalla.

In addition to their scholastic achievements these students had the following interests:

Bill—President of the Science Club and member of the team which competed in the city-wide debates.

Kim—President of the Photo Club, and member of the Tricolor Photographic staff, and Vice-President of the Science Club.

TROPHIES

THE GRIESDORF TROPHY

The Griesdorf Trophy, counterpart of the Harley-Millar-Sutton Trophy, was donated by David Griesdorf, a former student of this school. It is presented annually to the most outstanding capable girl in the graduating class.

This year's winner, Jeanne Little, has been an honors student in Grades Ten, Eleven and Twelve. She has also been very active in school affairs. As an undergraduate she was prominent in House League, the Modelling Club and the Curling Club.

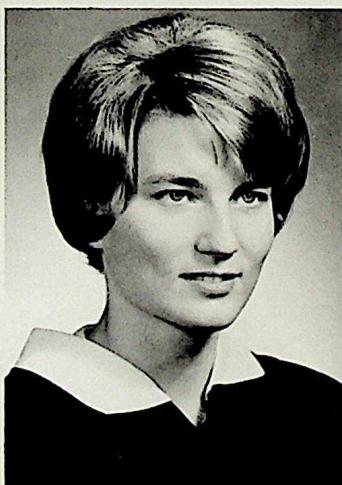

This year Jeanne, with consistent cheerfulness and remarkable efficiency, has filled three important positions in this school. She is Chairman of the Activities Board, Personal Editor of the Tricolor, and Vice-President of the Students' Union.

THE SCARBOROUGH TROPHY

The Scarborough Trophy was donated by the Students' Union in 1952 as a memorial to Mr. Charles Scarborough, a former teacher of Strathcona High School. It is presented annually to a student outstanding in academic achievement and in service to the school.

Jacqueline Kruger, a capable student, received honors standing in Grade Ten and Eleven. Her average this year is 73.75%. Jackie has been one of Scona's most diligent workers this year. She has been Secretary of the Students' Union, and has been very active in Student Council work. She was also a member of the Science Club and the School Chorus. Perhaps most significant of all has been Jackie's cheerfulness and her willingness to help when needed around the school.

THE HOME and SCHOOL ASSOCIATION TROPHY

This trophy is awarded annually to the girl who best combines athletic ability with sportsmanship, leadership, and service in the field of athletics.

The winner this year is Margaret Ewing. Margaret is a member of the Swim Club, and coach of Swim Team. She is an active member of the Senior Girls' Basketball Team. This year she was Room Representative of the Students' Council. Marg. is an honors student, and this year she has won the Book Prize given annually to the top student in Latin 30.

FIRST PRIZE ON HUMAN DESTINY

By Bill Dunaway

I wandered along the sea tonight
And watched the surf roll in.
I watched it crash and swirl along,
And roll across the beach.
The foaming surf chewed up the sand
Then slowly gave it up
And as it rolled back out to sea
The beach regained its broad expanse.
I watched it o'er and o'er again
The battle between sea and sand.
Not one would yield, yet each gave way
As the other reigned supreme.
And as I watch this awesome duel
I often come to think
Of good and evil choosing sides
To fight like sea and sand.
And is this not our destiny
To fight like sea and sand
The never-ending oblivion,
Enveloping all mankind?

THIRD PRIZE THREE POEMS

By D. A. Winfield

WINTER BURIAL

The cold frost crusted earth receives
Its guest indifferently.
No sound of welcome.
Just the clunk of earth,
Hollow on the coffin lid,
And mourning sobs
Of old companions.
The trees bare, skeletal,
Against the grey sky
That broods upon
The scene beneath.
The mourners mourn,
Then flee to hearthsides,
Leaving him alone
In the earth
In winter.

SECOND PRIZE SONG OF A WINTRY NIGHT

By Marg. Calder

A soundless song,
A melody,
Of night
From wind and melting snow
Whispers
Through the dark pine tree
And tinkles
From the frozen row
Of icicles
That melt
And give the rhythm to the rhapsody
Which rises,
Crystal clear,
To live
And fill the night
With secret glee
Rising
Cold
And free
To fill the night
With ecstasy.

THE TRANSIENT

I've walked the roads of loneliness
At the bitter dead of night
Trudging wearily along
With not a car in sight
With wind full blowing in my face
And rain drenched to the skin
I bemoan softly as I trudge along
The predicament I'm in.
Each day another journey
Each night another day
Continually a'roving
Along that sad highway.
I am no ancient mariner.
No albatross have I.
Just an incessant wanderlust,
That I'll have until I die.

DEATH

We are the dead
Beneath the turf we lay
Waiting forever
For faroff judgment day
Don't pity us who lie
Here in the solemn ground
We are free at least
From being in fallout drowned.

SEPARATISM SIMPLIFIED

By Brad Willis

Moderate radicals throughout Canada are agreed that Canadian unity is becoming increasingly precarious because of the inexplicable behaviour of the Separatists, or "habitants", as they are sometimes called. For years these people were content to live a quaint, rustic existence in their little thatched huts on the edge of the St. Lawrence River, emerging only to play hockey and to administer an occasional defeat to the Conservative Party. Both these activities were commendable. But recently, French-Canadians have begun to take an unexpectedly vigorous, and totally uncalled-for interest in their own political affairs; this interest has culminated in a widespread desire for secession.

Most Canadians, and a large number of Canadiens, are aghast at this proposal. With justifiable agitation they point to the vast number of factors tending to promote Canadian unity, to elements of our national life so distinctively Canadian that everybody understands and reveres them. The Quebec countryside has been, for many years, dotted with a phenomenon common to and comprehended by all of Canada—a little white and red sign that reads, "Buvez Coca-Cola!" At least half the population is aware that we have a national flag, and the majority of this group can draw it from memory. Free translations of the speeches of French-Canadian Members of Parliament are available to their English-speaking colleagues. When there is so much to unite us, how can discontent and division arise?

Reflection upon the above argument has prompted a considerable outpouring of righteous indignation from English Canada, finding vent in such expressions as, "Oh, so they think they can get along without us, eh? Well, let 'em try. See how far they get", and, "If they want a civil war, O.K., they can have one."

National unity can only be achieved when we determine the causes of the present discord. Why do English-speaking Canadians have such a confused understanding of the thought processes of French-Canadians? Why have many of us stopped trying to understand Quebec altogether?

I think I have found the cause of the prevalent lack of communication between the two major factions in our country, the cause of the warped concept of French Canada that English Canada has. It is the high-school French book.

There is nothing wrong with the instruction contained in high-school French books. By the time he is through high-school, the average student has memorized a few uncomplimentary French phrases suitable for shouting derisively at people unacquainted with the language, and can almost decipher the French section of a cereal package.

What is wrong with these texts is the impression they give a reader of the mentality of French-speaking people. The people in these books—the only French-speaking people many Canadians ever come across—are hopelessly feeble-minded. The peculiarity of their actions and speech make this the only conceivable conclusion that can be drawn about them.

The songs of a people are generally thought to afford a good insight into its character. French songs presented in textbooks do not speak well for their originators. One of the first ones Alberta students encounter goes:

I.

"Do you know how to plant the cabbages
In the way, in the way,
Do you know how to plant the cabbages
In the way that we do?"

This song speaks for itself; it clearly indicates that French-speaking people are meddlesome to a degree approaching missionary fervour. Not content to let other people plant their cabbages in whatever way they please, they must impose upon their hearers alien farming methods.

In a different text appears another, equally irritating musical effort:

"Getting up at six, breakfasting at ten,
Having supper at six, going to bed at ten,
Makes a man alive ten times ten."

The full meaning of this escapes me, but it clearly demonstrates an unrivalled dogmatism and obtuseness. If a person made a habit of getting up at six o'clock in the morning it would be evidence of mild eccentricity; and if he usually postponed breakfast for four hours, an observer would be forced to conclude that either his grasp on reality was tenuous, or that he had committed a terrible sin and had decided to do penance by fasting. Why such a regimen should make a man alive, rather than hasten his death, is an insoluble question.

Early this year, I read some singular conversations in a textbook which is being used in several provinces. The strangest of these was an exchange between Robert, a student, and his teacher, during the course of which it must be assumed that one or both of them became temporarily deranged.

SECOND PRIZE

AN ANALYSIS OF SOCIAL STUDIES

By Bill Harris

Our Social Studies course is the most universally boring, troublesome and disliked subject in high school. Why? Because most of the charges laid against it are true: it is repetitive, disconnected, disorganized, far too generalized, and deadly dull. The textbooks are inadequate, and the student is left with little real knowledge about history, economics, or geography.

These are hard accusations against one of the most central and important school subjects, but they are true. First, Social Studies is the only academic course which has not undergone major changes in the past few years. Many examples confirm this. English 10 and English 20 have appeared only in the past two years, a clear improvement over the previously separate Language and Literature, although the textbooks have not changed. English also contains Literature 21, one of the very best courses in high school. Physics has now branched into the entirely new 30X (and 20X) courses. Chemistry 30 has a new, vastly improved textbook and will have a new lab course. Biology has new texts too. Many changes of courses and texts are taking place in Mathematics. French is in its second year of new texts and other improvements in all three grades, and Latin is now integrated with its single textbook.

What has happened to Social Studies? The Grade Twelve book is so old that a revising supplement, itself now three years behind, has been put out. The teacher must go beyond the book for far too much of the necessary material. Moreover, the book is far too vague and abstract about any subject it treats to be a good summary. Examples of this abound. Such an important section of history as World War I, the text covers in three small pages: the actual events of war are not even mentioned. The Great Depression is barely discussed. Everyone in high school knows that a depression happened in the Thirties, but few know how or why, and many would like to know. World War II is treated in almost as niggardly a fashion as World War I—six pages, including pictures. This vastly important war is dismissed in such vague and almost meaningless terms as, "The new conflict marked the advent of total war as it had been foreshadowed by the earlier world struggle." Huge events are passed by in phrases like, "In 1944 the ring began to close . . .; the western Allies invaded Normandy, liberated France and advanced across the German frontier." (Both these quotations are from Canada in the Modern World.)

The texts for Grades Ten and Eleven are only slightly better, although the one for Grade Twelve is the chief offender. Our European Heritage, for example, treats the entire history of Russia up to the Bolshevik Revolution in less than a chapter. Even with such super-condensation, the book covers too much subject matter to be finished in a year. It tries to embrace world government, Canadian history, and Canadian culture as well as world history from 1500 to 1900.

This leads to another major flaw in our courses: repetition. I personally recall studying Canadian history in Grade Seven, Grade Nine, Grade Eleven, and now again in Grade Twelve. Similar duplications of effort occur again and again. Canadian history should be important to us, but it should also be placed in better perspective. An elimination of this wasted effort could free invaluable amounts of time for other studies. Another waste of effort is our study of economics and geography. The Grade Twelve text explains international trade and finance in a manner too general and elementary to be useful or enlightening. Its description of the business cycle, for example, is ludicrously obvious and almost infantile. Geography, as it is now presented, is a mundane and tedious subject for all but the few interested in it. Anything learned about natural resources, for instance, is forgotten the day after the test is over.

I propose the following solution: Introduce an integrated five or six-year program of world history, beginning with the dawn of civilization and ending with the present. Grade Seven or Eight is not too early to start. Eliminate economics and geography altogether, except where they are needed to elucidate history. They are complicated and intriguing subjects by themselves and should become separate courses, as is Geography 20. Also eliminate repetition of subject matter. These measures would effectively quadruple the time now spent on history. This program would also require a series of interrelated textbooks written in reasonable detail. A broad picture of the flow of history, which Social Studies must try to achieve, may be accomplished only after looking carefully at the historical events—the details—themselves. Furthermore, history can be just plain interesting.

Must Social Studies remain the most apathetic and despised subject in school? It doesn't have to be.

THIRD PRIZE

O TO BE AN AGIBRASILLO

By Willa McPhail

Have you ever dreamed of becoming an agibrasillo? I have. We all dream sometimes of achieving impossible feats; so my secret desire to combine the qualities of an amoeba, a giraffe, a zebra, a sloth, and an armadillo, while it may clash with your hopes of becoming a Great Grey Kangaroo, is understandable.

To me, amoebic qualities are essential. Existing without brain or brawn, the amoeba has no problem of nervous tension or morning backache. This minute creature never worries about communism, separatism, or magnetism: and she never suffers from cancer, polio, or tired blood. She can be treated as insignificant throughout her life and not be bothered.

Her life is a good life because she is transparent — she cannot deceive. There are no hypocritical actions, such as playing the philanthropist for the sake of praise; no fooling the old milkman for the saving of twenty-three cents; and no suing the neighbour's son for crushing the prize, triple-headed spoon-fed, hybrid daffolion that you yourself tripped over the night before. So if I were part amoeba, although in ignorance and poverty, I would dwell in peace and contentment.

If I were part giraffe, I would inherit a high position in life, for it seems that the easiest way to reach the top nowadays is to be born there. With my towering height I could see clearly ahead into the future and back into the past. (I do not know which would appear worse.) The knowledge gained by such visions would provide me with a great understanding of human nature and affairs. It would not be necessary for me to stick my neck out and impossible to put my foot in my mouth.

From the physical standpoint the giraffe with its beautiful eyes and long lashes would endow me with an appeal to those who appreciate this type of beauty: namely, men. Fascinated by my deep, liquid-brown eyes, sparkling under fluttering lashes, they would draw nearer; and as they approached in a spell, I would add to their enchantment with an enticingly soft "moo".

From another four-legged critter, the zebra, I would derive one extremely important virtue. Equally black and white in color, this animal has no logical, much less illogical, reason to prejudiced against either.

My fourth choice, the sluggish non-conformist of the jungle, is the sloth. This peculiar varmint refuses to become caught up in the mad rush of modern life. Instead, it lives a leisurely life hanging upside down in a most unorthodox manner, contradicting both the law of gravity and conventions of society. With such a manner I would have the courage to wear orange tights when Mongolian bloomers with pink and green striped ruffles were in style, to confess openly that I enjoy classical music, and to go out and vote on election day when I come of age.

But with these entirely unacceptable actions, I would need some form of defense. Thus, the armadillo. Owing to the armadillo's impenetrable shell, I would have a safe retreat where I could escape from ridicule, vulgarities, rumor, small talk, and chemistry lectures. Also I could eliminate the necessity of a fallout shelter, saving myself quite an expense while still maintaining my prestige. For, contrary to the popular belief, fallout shelters are protection against degradation not radiation.

Therefore by combining these five very different animals — the armadillo, the sloth, the zebra, the giraffe, and the amoeba — I would create in myself an ideal example of sincerity, serenity, wisdom, impartiality, freedom, and security. Agibrasillos are nice dreams, but I'm glad I'm a human.

TEACHER: Are you sick, Robert?

ROBERT: No, but I am late. I got up at eight.

TEACHER: Are you speaking Italian?

ROBERT: No, I speak Spanish but now I am speaking English.

Even when they remain coherent, textbook personalities exhibit odd traits. The most prominent of these is a strange fascination with nouns. If they have returned from a shopping trip, they feel it their duty to expend several paragraphs itemizing their purchases. If they enter a room, they are impelled to enumerate all the objects in view. They live lives of childish simplicity, chiefly concerned with the most mundane aspects of it — going to the market, driving a car, visiting relatives, and so forth.

It would be redundant to further describe these text-book people; I think that an explanation of the paternalistic attitude of English Canada towards Quebec has already been provided.

Perhaps if French-Canadians were aware of the mass of propaganda that is being directed against them they would begin to write the textbooks!

Short Story

FIRST PRIZE

THE LEDGE

By Chris Brown

He climbed for what seemed like hours before he reached the top. When, however, he finally crawled up on the smooth grass that covered most of the tiny ridge, he felt a new sense of pride and strength, as if he had grown up a little with each foot of rock he scrambled over. Exhausted, he rested now. Lying on his back he tried not to think about why he had come up here, but as he stared up at the cool, blue sky, his mind kept returning to that one afternoon.

They had all been here, all five of them, just sitting throwing stones into the clear deep pool that formed at the base of the fall. For awhile they had just sat and watched the thin stream of white water come spilling off the ledge, on which he was now lying, and tumble twenty feet straight down into the basin below.

It must have been when they were sitting there looking at it, that Davey got the idea. He was the biggest and oldest of the group and was always getting wild ideas. All of a sudden, he had jumped to his feet and scrambled up to the top of the falls. Kenny could still remember how Davey had stood there like some kind of little god and bragged that he could jump down into the pool without hurting himself. Of course no one believed him and they all dared him to do it, so he did. He threw himself over the lip of the fall and fell for what seemed like an awfully long time before he hit the water, almost face-first. It must have been close to a full minute before Davey came up but when he did he looked proud enough to bust. He got out of the pool, took off his shirt and threw it on the ground.

"If anybody else will do that," he said, "I'll give him my shirt!"

One by one, all the boys climbed to the ledge. And one by one all the boys jumped, or even dived off—all except Kenny. Three times he came to the ridge and almost threw himself off, but he never quite made it. The others laughed at him and called him "Chicken!" He still couldn't bring himself to do it.

Now in the early morning sun, Kenny stripped off his shirt and pants and stood on the narrow ledge, his small tanned body glowing in the late summer sun. Cautiously he approached the edge and looked down into the pool below. The dark water looked cold and very hard and the rocks around the base of the fall where it met the pool looked larger and seemed to stick out farther than before. He would have to push himself well out from the fall when he went to be sure to clear them. He remembered how Teddy had only pushed out a little and had just missed the rocks. They all figured he had killed himself at first until he bobbed up at the far end of the pool.

He stood there looking down and tried to imagine what it would be like. What would he think, in that fraction of a second that he would be suspended in space, before he started to fall? What would happen when he hit the water? Would it hurt?

All of a sudden he could feel the fear choking up inside him. He knew if he was going to do it, it would have to be now. He could feel his heart pounding and he took a large breath to quiet it. And that's when it happened. Before he knew it, he was in mid air and falling. A thousand thoughts raced through his mind. God, had he judged far enough? Was the pool deep enough? Would he make it alive? . . . Slap! It was all over. He was smothered in the crushing darkness. It was strangling him, cutting off his wind and pounding at his eyes and ears. He fought for life, kicking out with his arms and legs, shoving with every muscle in his young body until he finally broke the surface.

He crawled out of the pool at the far end and just lay there shaking. The fear was still there but it didn't matter now. He had done it and that was the thing. Later as he walked back down the road towards the farm, the little seven year old boy thought what it was like to be a man. In a small way, he even thought that now he was a man.

SECOND PRIZE

THE TOILET WATER CAPER

By Bruce Yoneda

If it had not been for his dear Prudence's birthday, Mr. McTaggart would never have stepped onto the ladies' wear floor of Marshall Wells that fateful afternoon. He detested the thought of buying lingerie or perfume, but they had been the only reasonable gifts among absurd hints for a car, fur coat, or new house. So here he was, feeling as conspicuous and incongruous as ever as he cautiously approached a clerk in the lingerie department.

The clerk, one of those stout Margaret Rutherford types, greeted him with the usual "Can I do something for you?"

He cleared his throat and replied awkwardly. "Could I try . . . I mean may I see your slip . . . your selection of slips?" He felt like a cornered fox. He never could understand why Prudence liked such frilly underthings when no one ever saw them.

"What size does she take?"

He fidgeted for a moment, then beamed. "She's about your size only not quite as . . ."

The saleslady drew herself up and he could see her suppressing that urge to kill. She led him over to a rack where several of the things were hanging. With increasing coldness she said, "These are about your size. Take your selection to the cashier over there." She turned and left abruptly.

Mr. McTaggart felt alone and friendless in an alien world. In the far distance he saw the escalator inviting him to escape. For a refreshing moment he thought of going down to the next floor and buying Prudence some "Turtles", but remembering her diet he continued thumbing glumly through the slips.

It was then that he happened to notice the price tag on one of them. With a disdainful "Waste of money" he turned, tripped over a stool, and stumbled into the arms of one of those provocative mannequins. Groping around the floor and disrobed mannequin, he found his fallen spectacles, and restoring the mannequin to decency, he set it up and strode quickly away. He sensed the disgusting stares of the clerks through the rows of scantily clad torsos. It seemed that his attempt to purchase a slip had been an unauthorized intrusion into some Arabian's harem.

He wandered around for some time before finding the perfume counter. The first thing he noticed, besides the offensive odor, was the saleslady. Her eyelashes hung out like awnings from her bruised eyes. With a haystack hairdo and one of those dresses that held on tight going around the curves of her spreading figure, she looked quite hideous. Avoiding her, he went to the opposite side of the counter and studied some of the bottles sitting there. With names such as "Witchcraft", "Antoinette", "Wanton", "Pour Seduction", "Indiscreet", and "Parfum de Sin" splashed over them, he realized a major cause of the rising immorality everyone was talking about.

He jumped when the saleslady asked the usual "What can I do for you?" in an affected French accent.

"Er . . . yes. Do you have any perfume . . . I mean what types have you?"

She brought out several bottles and thrust the first one under his nose. He recoiled in a violent fit of coughing. After asking for something a little weaker, she brought out some more bottles. He sampled four of them.

"These are rather nice, although I don't understand why they have different labels when they all smell the same." The saleslady was obviously ignorant of men's ineptitude in this delicate field. It was fortunate for Mr. McTaggart's self-composure that most of the saleslady's eyes were hidden by hair.

"How about this one?" he said, pointing ambitiously between two bottles in the showcase. When she finally brought out the right one, he knocked over three bottles as he leaned over to sniff it. He heard the tittering of some customers waiting behind him. "I guess I had better hurry." After a reflective pause he said, "If you were a girl . . . I mean if you were my . . . He shuddered and continued timidly. "If you were buying some perfume which would you choose?"

For the sake of her sanity she picked up the nearest one.

"How much is it?"

"Thirty-three dollars."

As he turned to leave, he bumped into a woman laden with parcels. He was helping her pick up her strewn parcels when he remembered the name of a scent his mother used to like. Hurriedly apologizing, he went back to the perfume counter and raising his arm to attract the saleslady's attention, he knocked over an exhibit of costume jewelry . . .

He had to elbow his way through the late afternoon shopping crowds before he finally arrived at the bus-stop, exhausted. His rather harsh encounter with a store detective and the ghastly face of the saleslady when he returned had drained his spirits. For his entire afternoon all he had accomplished was the purchase of one small bottle of "Friendship Garden Toilet Water". His Prudence had better like it!

VIA TRITA, VIA TUTISSIMA

By George Lingel

"In 1939, Mussolini invaded Albania, forcing Zog I to abdicate the Albanian throne and move to France." One result of this was that I ran into Felicia Pohl. Under normal circumstances I would have apologized, picked up my book and continued down the hall absorbed in Zog I.

Felicia Pohl wasn't the kind of girl you shook that easily. My eyes looked on her face. Her skin was as good as skin gets, her lips were soft and definitely red, her hair was the colour of honey slightly tinted, her eyes were green and her figure was symmetrical in the right places.

I composed myself and said, "In 1939, Mussolini invaded Albania, forcing Zog I to abdicate the Albanian throne." My audience, which had accumulated in the narrow hall after the collision, roared with laughter.

This was the start of a social whirl I had not thought possible. Until this time I had been under the impression I was at university to acquire an education. At first my conscience tugged at my being. "Felicia," I would plead, "I simply must stay home tonight and translate ten pages of Virgil for Latin tomorrow."

"Don't you know anything," she would laugh and whip out a Coles' translation. If I was worried about a political science exam she would hand me a syllabus that condensed the whole course to an easy four hour reading.

Although my name never appeared on the honours list, my grades were adequate and I had the satisfaction of knowing I was living a well-rounded social life. Occasionally a doubt "That all good things must end" would appear like a chameleon, then change colours and disappear.

My premonition became a reality in the class of Professor J. D. Fawly. He wheezed into the class and announced in his usual august voice that he expected everyone to hand in a 2500 word theme on any subject by next Friday.

After class I met Felicia in the hall. "Felicia," I said, "I'm sorry I can't go out with you tonight."

"Why?" she asked.

"I've got to turn in an English theme for Friday and today's Tuesday. I'd better get to work."

"But the "Rolling Stones" are here tonight. Don't they really knock you out?"

"No," I replied truthfully. "Listen, Felicia, this isn't the kind of thing I can chisel out on. Now I better go home and start looking for material."

"How long does it have to be?" she asked.

"Twenty five hundred words."

"What's the topic?"

"Anything you want."

"Well then what's the hurry? It's Tuesday. Besides Jackie DeShannon's on with them."

I didn't get to the theme until Thursday afternoon. I sent the cat and my sister out, closed the door to my room, opened my window, filled my fountain pen, adjusted the flexible lamp, disconnected the phone—and sat down and drew concentric circles for two hours.

A call from below caught my attention. I looked out the window. "How ya doing?" Felicia asked.

I frowned.

"Just as I thought. Let me in."

In my room she showed me a dusty library volume of essays entitled, "The Delights of G. Phoebe". It had been published in 1871 and had been taken out only once before in 1933. "It's not as if it were plagiarism or anything," she said. "The man's dead by now."

"Plagiarism," I gasped.

"Write," she commanded. I copied the first essay and handed it in on the next day.

Three weeks later Professor Fawly handed back the other essays. He stopped at my desk and said, "I've entered your essay in the Francis Essay Contest. The judges are deadlocked whether to give you the award or another student. They've called in a Mrs. Siffle a former student here. Her style is much like yours. You'll leave after class."

I was whisked by car for the final judging. The judge was an elderly gray-haired little old lady. The other student and I were ushered in.

"Are these the two whipper-snappers who wrote these essays?" she snapped.

"We are," we replied.

"You!" She rapped the other student's knee with her cane. Why did you write about "The Reproduction of Oedogonium"? Why not "Leather Tanning"?

"And you!" I braced myself for the cane.

"Do you know what is so delightful about plucking apple blossoms and watching them float to the ground?" She turned and pointed to the other student.

"If you must give the prize to someone, give it to him."

Outside the room, Mrs. Siffle stopped me. "I must thank you. It's flattering to think that people are still reading my brother's books after all this time . . ."

I REMEMBER

By Lorene Hamilton

I walked with her to school each day . . .
Or she with me,
I with my thoughts.
Ne'er once I turned to look at her
But babbled words of wit
To be kind and entertain her.
Then, sometimes, we'd meet a friend
And I to him would turn
And talk and laugh about the people and the parties
Where she had not been.
We walked our own gait as we'd chat
Forgetting she was there.
Later we would talk of her
And I'd to him explain
"I feel so sorry for her, though."
And then we would go on to say
How shy she was, how boring and trite
And how she stammered and choked and blushed.
Then — on to more important things.
Two years have passed
She's popular; gay
Yet still on me she smiles
And talks to me.
"Come to my house Friday night . . .
We're having a party.
Everyone will be there!"
And I stammer a little, and choke and blush
And remember.

FOUNTAINS CAN BE FUN

By Bill Harris

The drinking fountain is a useful appliance found in almost any public building. Its presence is especially notable in schools, where in every hallway one of these protruding, gleaming objects of steel and marble greets the thirsty wayfarer's eye. But, as I shall show, the defenseless fountain is also the object of much abuse.

I refer to the time-honored custom of employing the fountains as secondary wastebaskets, when no legal refuse receptacle is immediately available. I think many people agree that few sights are more disgusting than wads of gum in a drinking fountain. It is almost a desecration. Usually this junk-depositing takes the form of cellophane, paper wrappers and packages, popsicle sticks, orange peels, and the perennial favorite, gum. Everyone knows this and has become used to it.

But I have investigated this matter and have found that occasionally these deposits take on more imaginative and bizarre forms. Following is a list of paraphernalia, each item of which I have honestly seen in the school fountains: one plum pit, one slice of watermelon, some paraffin, one jellybean, one chess club notice, two curling club notices, and one ordinary spoon. All these are unusual but not too startling; almost any fountain one passes has at least a small piece of gum wedged into one of the drainage holes. But now the dossier gets interesting: four pages from Our European Heritage; two dozen peanuts (at once); two applecores (at once); one apple, its skin and nothing else neatly removed; one flash bulb; one razor blade (Gillette Super Blue). The prize of them all, though, is an entire bag of popcorn which some enterprising spirit dumped into a particularly unfortunate fountain. By the time I passed it, the popcorn had disintegrated into a thoroughly revolting lumpy yellowish slime filling the whole fountain. And there was still a lineup for drinks!

What I find more incredible about this whole matter is that I have never actually seen anyone toss litter into a fountain. Where does it all come from? Sometimes I think there must be a secret Underground Against Clean Drinking Fountains, the members of which must furtively stalk the empty corridors, leaving behind them a trail of insidiously littered fountains. Perhaps they do this to undermine school morale, or to give our institution that "lived-in" look. Maybe the purpose is to add some spice to the janitors' humdrum day. I pity the caretakers anyway!

Another interesting facet of this problem is that the closer a fountain is to a legitimate trashcan, the more junk it is liable to collect. A fountain can be six feet from an untenantied wastecan and be heaped with garbage. Perhaps a remedy might be to label conspicuously all the fountains "TRASH" and build them in the shape of garbage cans, while making the real garbage cans small and putting them up on the wall. This camouflage could make a lot of people overly thirsty but lower the rate of insanity for janitors.

I know of no complete solution for this entire enigma. Possibly the situation in other high schools isn't the same; probably it is. The innocent, stoic drinking fountain seems doomed to its fate.

The night air was still. From its lofty perch in the darkened sky the moon shot down rays of heavenly light, basking the silent deadened land in an unearthly pale yellow glow. Far off in the distance Fabius could hear the clank of armor. "Why," he mused aloud, "do we guard a camp when there is no one but a few peasants in the whole area?"

"Perhaps so that no one can leap upon your tribune and kill him while he sleeps." The voice had come from the shadows directly behind Fabius. He swirled around, all his senses alert, his short efficient Roman sword drawn.

"Who is there? Identify yourself or I'll . . ."

"Fabius, it's me, Menester!"

"Menester! What in the Gods' name are you doing here?"

Menester's lean frame emerged from the shadow of a boulder. "I wanted to talk to you—alone."

"Well! We won't be disturbed here—that is, if you haven't aroused the whole camp." Fabius wasn't sure if he was happy to see his old friend again or annoyed. "How did you manage to sneak up on me like that?"

Menester smiled, "When we spoke last it was of religion. Since, I have chosen to follow this new religion. I am a follower of God. Fabius," his friend grew serious, "you said you would think over what we said."

"I did. I even spoke of it to a fellow soldier, Germanicus. He laughed. He said that we were foolish to even entertain such an idea."

"But you Fabius?" Menester's voice was urgent. "Do you believe in Him?"

"Believe in Him? Menester, it isn't that easy for me!"

"What do you mean?" Menester spoke as the tutor who has lost his patience with a dull-witted pupil. "Either you believe or you don't. There is no half way point about it."

"Menester," Fabius toyed with his sword while he searched for the right words, "you are asking me to go against everything I have been brought up to believe in. No matter what I have done; no matter what I have gained, I have always attributed it to the Gods. Now you ask me to forget this and attribute it to the will of your almighty God. Please understand! What you said about him makes sense." Fabius stopped, "But what if the Roman Gods are the real Gods?"

"When I was first told the story last summer, I thought, 'But no one knows what he looks like! No one knows how he acts! It is as though he were an unknown God.' But Fabius, I do know him now. He is the spirit within man—he is the reason for life."

"Menester, I want to believe. I need to believe in something a little more solid than a stone statue, I just need more time."

"Solid granite," Menester smiled, but sobered quickly. "As for time, you have a whole lifetime. Jesus will be speaking at the temple. Would you like to come with me and listen?"

"Yes. Maybe it will help me to decide."

Three days later Fabius and Menester were seated in a small tavern. "Everything he said rang so true. Sacrifice seems senseless, but . . ." Menester only smiled. "Now I am confused. I believe that this man, this Jesus, speaks the truth. It is only fear of, of, of I don't know what that keeps me from denouncing Jupiter and the Olympians. Christianity is built on something solid. Love, trust! They are things that you can feel secure in. But what do we Roman's have? Fear. You don't worship what you fear. I don't know! I think, Menester, that you have converted a non-believer."

Over the din of the crowded tavern came a muffled drum beat. "Fabius, isn't that the military toll?"

"Yes. I must report to the square." He glanced out the window. "Menester, it's already late. I will see you again tomorrow. Till then," Fabius paused, "may God be with you." He smiled at his own words.

Pushing through the milling crowds, Fabius met Germanicus and the two proceeded to the square where their troop was forming. "Do you know why we are being called Germanicus?"

"Not really. I think it's something about a riot. Oh! Gaius wants us over there."

The two men joined their troop which consisted of eight other men, while four other troops formed around them. The tribune called Drusus stood before the assembled men. "There has been an act of treason committed. Today a man named Jesus has been charged not only with this but also with inciting riots. He will be crucified. It is our duty to see the matter is carried out with propriety and efficiency. Gaius, you will see to the actual crucifixion. Claudius, you will see that . . ."

Fabius heard no more. 'It can't be.' His mind reeled, 'Not Jesus! Not after all he said. They can't I won't . . .'

"Fabius! You and Germanicus will see to the body." Gaius was abrupt.

"I brought you the sledge, Fabius. I sure hope that this doesn't take too long." Germanicus turned a watchful eye to the sky. "It looks like we are in for a storm."

Fabius took the weapon from Germanicus. He raised it in the air, faltered, and then tears welled up in his eyes. "I can't do it! I just can't!" Fabius' anguished whisper was hardly audible.

"My son, I am not afraid to die." A steady hand rose to his shoulder. "I have done my duty here. Yours is to come. Serve my Father wisely."

Fabius swung the hammer head down to meet the spike. The resounding ring echoed across the valley.

November 1, 1964 at the age of seventeen.

Drama

This year we were very happy to welcome to the drama wing our new teacher, Mr. Agrell-Smith. Though we were sorry to lose Mr. Pimm we are finding Mr. Agrell-Smith a fine and able teacher. He has kept us busy in classroom time with assignments on speech, movement, stage craft and play analysis. We have all benefited from his personal experiences and we feel that progress has been made. For the greater part of the year he has been getting accustomed to his new surroundings and acquainting himself with the students' abilities, therefore no noon hour productions have been presented.
